

A LETTER FROM DR. SEAN LUCAS

February 27, 2020

My dear Friends:

Wasn't our missions conference last week glorious? It was a fabulous time of learning what God is doing on our Midsouth campuses. You had opportunities to spend time with these campus ministers and campus staff members, learning about their blessings and challenges, considering how you might support them prayerfully and financially. And then, Sunday, to hear from Brian Sorgenfrei and Anthony Forrest, as well as the tremendous concert from Tom Douglas. It was a wonderful week.

I want to express our thanks to Ed Norton, Tameria Rackley, Charles Clowers, Leigh Fox, Paul Halford, and all of their teams—missions committee, kitchen staff, operations staff, and so many other folks. To pull off this week involves so many working together toward a common goal—hopefully, you were encouraged at what God is doing in his world through Reformed University Fellowship.

And Sunday is March 1. In six Sundays, it will be Easter Sunday; we will be nearing high school and college graduations and summertime and all that comes with that. But I am reminded of something a preacher friend of mine once said: we really only have this coming Sunday and we don't have any Sundays to waste. If the Lord's Day is his day (and it is), and if he promises to meet with us (and he does), and if Word, sacrament, and prayer are means of grace (and they are), then there really should be no other place we want to be than here among God's people worshipping our God together. Looking forward to Sunday!

Best,
